Articulation Pathways

Articulation pathways are a pathway between two or more universities and their academic programs; in this case, between TMU and listed Australian or New Zealand universities.

They are formally agreed and approved admission pathways for a student of TMU into a program of study at a partner university, with pre-agreed credit for prior learning and conditions of entry.

TMU offers many different pathways within the business and commerce majors into international programs in a 1+2, 1.5+1.5, or 2+1 year structure, with the first part of the degree completed at TMU. All programs are 3 years and are 100% the foreign partner degree.

Destination universities

All the CERI-TMU 'destination universities' are carefully chosen for their different strengths, market positioning, ranking, brand, location, country and reputation. From a traditional and prestigious 'Group of Eight' University, to modern universities that focuses on technology or other areas, CERI-TMU has a wide range of partner universities that will suit you. These 'destination universities' will be where you complete your final 1.5 or 2 years of your degree (see Page 23).

Conditional or provisional entry

When you enrol into one of our international programs, you will receive a 'conditional' or 'provisional' entry, meaning that the partner university accepts you into their program, provided you meet specific conditions. These are steps to qualify for full admission to that university - usually GPA and IELTS scores.

Credit for studies

Students who have been conditionally or provisionally accepted must pass certain listed subjects with a minimum GPA (see Page 23). You are then granted credit by your destination university, so you do not have to study them when you go abroad. We call this 'RPL', or 'Recognition of Prior Learning', or 'credit transfer'.

Your destination

Our education and university partnerships span continents. Each solution is designed to reflect our partner's strategic vision. Above all, they are built to deliver excellent student experiences, great value and outstanding outcomes.
